LOCAL NOTICE TO MARINERS.

No. 71.

Removal work at Canton River Barriers; precautions to be observed by passing vessels.

No. 67. Notice is hereby given that the signals contained therein are annulled and that in future Warning and Danger signals in connection with removal work at the Barriers will be made as follows:—

A RED FLAG hoisted on a junk, steam launch or other craft in the neighbourhood of the iron and Bridge Barriers, indicates a craft with high explosives on board.

TWO BLACK SPHERES hoisted on a junk in the vicinity of any of the Barriers, indicates that danger would be caused to life and property by the wash of steamers.

This signal will be hoisted when a diver is down, when explosives are laid, or when a junk is so fast to the bottom or to piles, as to render the wash of a steamer dangerous.

Vessels approaching the Barriers should keep a careful look out for the signal, and if hoisted, slow down at a sufficient distance to prevent her wash reaching the boat at work, and proceed slow until well past.

If owing to any reason it is unsafe for a vessel to pass the Iron Barrier, A RED TRIANGULAR SHAPE 6 feet in height, will be hoisted on a staff at the Barrier light.

A vessel seeing this signal should on no account attempt to pass.

CHINA'S GREAT LOVE OF PEACE.

The Chinese Minister at Washington, Sir Chenung Liang-Cheng, made an address in Philadelphia, December 17th, before the Academy of Practical Sciences, in which he said: 'The rise of a great people is, as a rule, the result of long and successful struggles against hostile neighbors. Such was the beginning of the Greeks and the Romans. Such was the beginning of the modern nations of Europe. Far different, however, was the case with the Chinese. They seemed to be more concerned with problems of material improvement than with measures of offense and defense. Accordingly, the first page of Chinese history are not given, as is usually the case with the history of most nations, to providential episodes, heroic exploits, bloody battles and stubborn sieges, but to invasions and discoveries, which enabled the Chinese people to attain a high plane of civilization long before many others could emerge from barbarism.'

The invention of writing was one of the first achievements of special importance. Among the other benefits of civilization, the origin of which the Chinese have traced to the remote past, may be mentioned the establishment of public fairs for the exchange of commodities; the use of nets in fishing and hunting; the rearing of silkworms; the cultivation of the various kinds of grain; the use of medicinal plants for the healing of diseases. From the beginning the arts of peace were cultivated seemingly to the exclusion of the arts of war.

'The pacific beginning of the Chow Dynasty, about 1,000 B.C., presented a striking contrast to its turbulent future. During the centuries under its rule China was a veritable armed camp. It was a time when the nation was divided against itself. After 500 years of continuous warfare the country, thoroughly exhausted, at last reunited under the undisputed sway of the Dynasty of Tsin. The princes of this imperial house made their power so strongly felt from the Pacific to the Caspian that the country over which they once ruled with

THE DESTROYER.

She roared away down the sunset track,
Beyond the mines and the boom;
The spray flashed red on her turtle back
To the whir of her engine-room.
Her funnels spotted their smoke-plumes
Black
She looked the spirit of doom!
Along her sides the wavelets hissed,
As she opened out her speed;
They fell astern to snarl and swirl,
And writhle in her wake and bleed.
Horn was a force no seas resist,
And she gave them little heed.
Away in the west the red sun sank
To down in the heaving flood;
And fast—with never a noisy crank
Or piston rod a-thud,
Her stern set low in the high wave-bank—
She swam on a sea of blood.
Into the night, when the sun had gone,
The fast Destroyer flew,
And never a side-light gleamed or shone,
As the pale stars grew and grew,
What errand grim did she speed upon?
Only her captain knew.
Through the swooping seagulls she clove a track
Into the blinding gloom—
Stumpy-tumtled, water, black—
She was the Spirit of Doom.
And the keen spray hailed on her turtle-back,
To the throb of her engine room.

Back to port forth the Destroyer crept,
As the dawn rushed in flame;
Her stacks were blistered, her decks sea-swept,
But she flicked her lips as she came;
And she took her place, where her comrades slept,
Like a hound that had killed its game.

THE LAST OF THE CZARS?

There is something terribly tragic in the solitary figure of the young man who is now regarded by the more enlightened of the subjects as, says M. A. P., 'The last of the Czars.' The more tragic when one remembers that he is the favourite nephew of beautiful Queen Alexandra, and that he courted his half-English Carissima on the broad waters of old Father Thames. For some time past sinister stories have found their way to the young Empress's friends—stories of scraps of paper, inscribed with words of awful warning, found by the doomed Czar, now on his writing table, now on the chest of drawers in his dressing-room. The Carissima has not been spared similar evidences that there is a traitor in the closest touch with her own and the Emperor's home life, and, with a terrible reminder of cruelty, the warnings left about the Empress's apartments all concern the safety of her children.

The Czar has always been a victim of the fortune tellers. When in England he frequently consulted a famous Bond Street seer. It was from him that he heard that war would be fatal to his personal happiness and reputation—hence the famous Peace Receipt. More recently, when in Paris, Nicholas visited in secret a noted décoré and she to his great anger, it is said, observed that the birth of a son would be an evil presage for Russia. Of late the Imperial interest in spiritualism has excited wide comment, and it is whispered that the Emperor fully believes himself to be in constant communication with the spirit of his late father.

A frequent cause of nervousness is tight-fitting shoes, and this is prevalent mostly among ladies. The compression of the foot irritates the nerves and muscles within it; this irritation extends up the legs; it reaches the heart, and so it continues its upward journey till it arrives at the brain, where mischief is wrought.

RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.

CARLYLE and Froide were men of wide knowledge and penetration. Of different types of mind, they naturally expressed themselves in different phraseology. The rugged, uncouth, piled-up adjectives of Carlyle were foreign to the mind of his contemporary. Both, however, have expressed an opinion on the absolute essentiality of religion, for the nation, and, therefore, for the individual. Froide says the most important fact to every man is his religion. "If we would know what a man is, we ask what notions he has formed about his duty to man and to God. The question is more widely asked than answered, for ordinary persons repeat what they have learned, and have formed no clear notions at all; and the few wise, though at bottom they may be as orthodox as bishops, prefer, usually, to keep their thoughts to themselves." Carlyle wrote, "There has never been a nation yet, that did anything great, that was not deeply religious." Goethe, who was by no means a narrow-minded partisan, and who had penetrated most of the forces and impulses which stir the activities, both of the individual and the nation, thought that "the deepest, the one theme of the world's history, to which all others are subordinate, is religion." Of course, these writers and hundreds of others, clearly distinguish between religion and ecclesiasticism. The latter is nothing more than the clothing which synods and priestly hierarchies have used to clothe the former, and make it more attractive to the masses. Like the fashions, it changes according to the prevailing tastes, and exigencies of the times. Neither can the schools of philosophy, or the attacks of scientific agnosticism destroy religion. As Kidd remarks "None of the so-called theories of men and things has proved itself a religion, and never can." It is simply a series of ipse dixit of small groups of men, which have never moved men to action, as religions have. Earnest men, therefore need not fear, either the crude abuse of the cleric, or the more serious and thoughtful objections of men like the late Herbert Spencer. Religion must and will live on. The mystery of the Queen, the Eternal, will always appeal to the "little" less mysterious souls, which most men believe themselves to possess. Religion, like everything else which manifests itself through, and for its expression, depends upon the activities and emotions of men, has been subject to the ebb and flow which characterizes most human phenomena. During a series of years, it seems to be overshadowed by more powerful interests that command the attention of mankind. Or, the champions of the popular forms of faith, as has been the case during the last thirty years, have spent their energies, more or less, in defending themselves against the recurrent attacks of those who think that they have something more attractive than the old. But though overshadowed for a time, and apparently less potent to control the thought and affections of men, religion has emerged from those periods of partial eclipse, as the sun emerges, glorious and powerful as ever. Then it is that there has been a revival of religion. The Reformation was such a period.

The sixteenth century was a period of enlightenment for Europe. There was a revival of learning. The fine arts flourished. America was discovered and men's minds were broadened. As Hogel finely says, "These were the three heralding events of the morning dawn, which after protracted storms, announced the advent of a bright day, and the Reformation itself was the all-diminishing sun." The great religious awakening which followed the preaching of Wesley and Whitfield was such another period, the emotionalism which accompanied that great revival was an object of scorn to the satirist and the pamphleteer, who, of course, neither understood it nor sympathized with it. But Locky and Green have made it fashionable to praise where once sneers ruled. Green says "in the nation at large, appeared a new moral enthusiasm, which, rigid and pedantic as it often seemed, was still healthy in its social tone, and whose power was seen in the disappearance of the profligacy which had disgraced the upper classes, and the foulness which had infested literature ever since the Restoration." A new philanthropy reformed our prisons, infused wisdom and clemency into our penal laws, abolished the slave trade, and gave the first impulse to a popular education. It is quite likely that the pride moves in that revival could not see all this at the time. They laboured for religion. Religion affected both national and civic life. Such another revival is now transforming Wales, and appears to be spreading throughout England. One of the most significant signs of the times is the way in which the secular press has recorded the religious phenomena. Even the stately and conservative Times has largely reported it, and, by its judicial fairness, in recording facts has reluked all flippancy. The revival itself, amidst many heartmoving scenes of Celtic emotionalism, is characterized by great spontaneity. Although Evan Roberts seems to be a wonderful young man, and appears to be clothed with great power, the fire is not of his kindling, nor, for its continuance, does it depend on his presence. Everywhere, there is a new eager interest, where before there was more formality or indifference. Further, though there are remarkable manifestations of uncontrollable emotionalism, in the practical results of the revival are uniform, and are seen in a radical transformation of manners and morals. Drunkenness has almost ceased to exist. Profanity is unheard. Old debts are being paid. Police courts are almost empty. At a football match recently, whilst forty thousand spectators were waiting for the play to commence, they passed the time away by singing hymns. This revival is touching England in various places. The undergraduates of the universities and the fishermen of Cornwall are coming under its influence. The end is not yet.

"Please step off the car with care" is a notice which appears in the electric trams. Most people would prefer to step off and leave care behind.

BENKS (at the conclusion of a recent meeting): Old Highman's opinions are somewhat foggy.

JIKS: Yes, he lives at the Peak.

A somewhat novel defence was put up by a Chinese woman charged with stealing, at the Magistrate's, this morning. In reply to the charge she said to the Inspector, "If you had arrested me in the day-time I might have stolen it, but I certainly could not steal at night. I am frightened to go out at night." Did you steal it? asked the Interpreter. "No," was the reply. The case was remanded.

Among the Justices of the Peace who are to be found like blackberries in Australia are some queer men. Some are highly educated; some cannot write their names. Stories galore are consequently told of their peculiarities and actions, and here is one just got from Queensland. The policeman in a bush town had put a man in the lockup for being drunk and disorderly. Next day one of the local Justices of the Peace was hunted up to try the unruly member. The magistrate took the charge sheet when in his place on the bench and read out: "George Brown, you are charged with being drunk and disorderly. I find you're free." The drunk bowed gravely to the bench, and started out. The constable nudged the J. P.'s elbow and told him that he ought to ask the accused "How do you plead—guilty or not guilty?" The J.P. called out: "Hey, hey! come back with me; I want you. How you bleed—killy or not killy." "Guilty, yer worship," replied the reprobate. "Oh, all right, all right—I find you're free, all the same."

Many and varied are the excuses and defences put forward by Chinese when on their trial for any offence. One of the quaintest remarks heard for some time was that made by a prisoner at the Supreme Court this morning. He was charged with disobeying an order of banishment, and, in putting forth a contention that it was a case of mistaken identity, he added, "Men are similar, and even inanimate objects are alike sometimes." His remark was logical, but not convincing.

In a certain dining establishment in Hongkong the Chinese occasionally use more water in the milk than is good for the milk. The systematic test constantly made by a certain diner who has a penchant for rice-pudding and milk, and the blank face of the celestial when accused of diluting the lactical fluid, recalls the ready wit of one English milk-vendor who believed in making his milk go as far as possible. One day a customer observed some peculiarly about the milk and said to the milkman: "You don't call this sky-blue stuff milk, do you? You ought to call it milk and water, instead of milk!"

The milkman answered politely: "So! do, sir. I always say, 'Milk-eeu,' which, as you are a man of education, you will know is foreign for water. I always keep within the law, sir."

The Girl From Kays.

In this musical comedy, which was produced at the Theatre Royal last night, the Dallas-Bandman Company were seen to great advantage. This comedy affords exceptional opportunities for individual work on the part of the artists forming the cast, and it is to their credit that one and all took full advantage of such opportunities, with the result that we have to chronicle another success for the company. When all is said and done it will be invidious for us to single out any particular artist, but a special word of praise is due to Messrs Ronalds, Cookham and Dallas, and Misses Frampton, Strachan, and Dolly Varden, whose singing of "Sammy" besides bringing her shrouded of floral tributes, literally brought down the house. We may be excused for remarking on the dexterity of the bouffant which passed over the footlights, but the reason for this is obvious when we remember that yesterday was St. Patrick's Day, and figuring in the dramatic personae are names which bear close alliance to the Emerald Isle. Tonight "The Girl From Kays" will be repeated, while on Monday The Duchess of Dairine, with Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dallas in the leading parts, will be staged.
